Knowledge of God's Word

When we share the Word of God with children, we share facts, stories of God working in the past, and His plan for our lives today and in the future. The Bible is one of the best ways we have to learn about who God is, and who we are. To truly know God and His will, a child must hear what He has to say. As teachers, we make it clear to children that the Bible is the Word of God. As Christians, we model a burning desire to listen to what God has to say.

Applying God's Word to the Heart

The Word of God moves and convicts each of us. When a child listens to God's Word, he or she may respond with emotions of guilt, conviction, joy, trust, peace or compelling mercy toward others. As teachers, we should intentionally create opportunities for this important response and not just rush through a lesson. Listening to the children's responses and encouraging vulnerability is essential to building community with the children as well as helping them connect to God.

Applying God's Word to Everyday Life

A desire to act out God's will in our lives naturally follows the child's understanding of and emotional response to God's Word. As teachers, we should guide children in exploring ways they can act on their new convictions and be obedient to God in thought, behaviour and action. For children to truly understand what they have learned about God and His Word, they must make connections between that new information and things they already know- such as experiences at school or home, relationships with friends and family, common feelings and challenges for their stage of life, etc.
